

British road casualties before and after the 1967 Breathalyser law

Casualties on weekend nights fell by about a third and stayed down. During commuting hours, when the pubs have been shut all night, they did not move.

Monthly values digitized from the figure in Ross, Campbell & Glass (1970), which draws both series on one scale. Dashed lines are period means. The weekend-night series stops at November 1968 in the original.
